Breathholding treatment guide

Breathholding spells in children, even when severe, are no cause for anxiety and result only from discordant parent - child relationships, says a Johns Hopkins University School of Medicine pediatrician.

The spells, says Dr. David Livingston, occur most often during the first two years of life and rarely after age five. These children are otherwise healthy and have normal intelligence. With them, breathholding appears mostly as a "spoiled child reaction", which will be repeated if the child's aim of attracting attention is indulged.

Treatment consists mainly of parent - child psychiatric guidance — no medication is needed. Behaviour problems, Dr. Livingston feels, should be handled with "quiet, confident firmness".

Private world

The Committee on Adolescence of the Group for the Advancement of Psychiatry, comprised of national authorities on childhood and adolescence, recently observed that many teen-age needs are being met via the closed circuit telephone. The Committee felt that dialing a peer and remaining in a private communication world is a means of escaping close family involvement and can be a tentative step towards independence.
