INTRODUCTION

These records were taken from newspaper, personal, and family data. They cover a period of about one hundred and fifty years. The newspapers used were the Windsor (Henry County, Missouri) REVIEW from December 1946 to November 1951, and from the Clinton (Missouri) EYE for various dates from 1946 to 1950. These together with family data from other sources, make a valuable addition to the pioneer material of the county.

Windsor is located in the extreme northeastern corner of Henry County, and in Windsor Township. It adjoins on the North to Jefferson Township, Johnson County, Missouri; on the Northeast by Green Ridge Township in Pettis County, Missouri; on the Southeast by White Township in Benton County, Missouri. The area covered by this material is approximately 14 miles in radius from Windsor. This includes the trade area which is centered in Windsor. This fact is especially valuable as Windsor was the town to which many farmers retired and therefore it was from here that many of the old timers were buried.

In the years 1870-1873 an attempt was made to organize the four townships mentioned above into a separate county to be called Meadows County, with Windsor as the county seat. This proposal failed twice in the legislature, each time by just a one vote margin. The main objection to the organization of this new county, would be that it would cut each of the surrounding counties into an "L" shape with the new county reaching within a few miles of each other county seat.

The pioneer families of the area came as early as 1830, although no land patents were granted in this region until 1838. The majority of settlers were from Kentucky, particularly from Bourbon county, and the district became locally called the Missouri Bourbon District. This settlement was followed by a planned colony of North Carolina Baptists who settled to the west of Windsor. Then, after 1848, many German refugees settled on the prairie lands southeast of Windsor. This rich prairie land had never been preempted by the early settlers who struck out along the creeks and streams, and who cleared their small fields laboriously while the rich lands were left for the late comers. Thomas Hart Benton had told the early settlers that this prairie land was unfit for settlement. Eventually descendants of these early pioneers did purchase some of the prairie land.

When the Civil War came, people in this area were divided on the question of secession, those who favored it remained in the Union. They did so feeling either that the nation should not be divided or that they did not believe in slavery as a matter of their religious convictions. During the war about half of the population of the county removed to Texas because of their Southern sympathies.

After the Civil War many families came from New England to create large business enterprises and to invest money in the "West". Most of these families did not remain; however they came and they reared families, some even married into the families of old settlers, but for the greatest part these later comers moved on west to California or died out altogether.
