RANDOLPH COUNTY, MISSOURI

Reference: Encyclopedia of the History of Missouri
Edited by Howard L. Conard
Volume V; Pages 296-299

A county in the northeast central part of the State, bounded on the north by Macon, east by Monroe and Audrain, south by Boone and Howard, and west by Chariton County; area, 311,000 acres.

The greater part of this divide is known as Grand Prairie, the slopes of which on either side decline for some distance, and as the streams enlarge, become more broken and hilly. The East Fork of the Chariton River enters the county at the north, west of the center, and in a circuitous route leaves it south of the center of the western line.

The territory now Randolph County, before the coming of white men to Missouri, was part of the great hunting grounds of the Missouri tribe of Indians, who were defeated in conflict by other tribes, and when white men first visited the territory the land was in possession of the Iowa and the Sac and Fox Indians. It is possible that some of the French Canadian hunters and trappers who were on friendly terms with the different tribes, visited what is now Randolph County before the beginning of the eighteenth century, though there is no record of their so doing.

The first permanent settlement was made in the territory about 1817. The pioneers were from Kentucky, Tennessee, and North Carolina. The roster of the earliest settlers, those who made homes for themselves before the county was organized, contains the names of

Up to 1823 there were no stores nearer than fifty miles (at Old Franklin), and trips for goods to that town, which was then the most important west of St. Louis, were common. Later stores were started at Fayette, and for a time that town was the chief trading point. There were few Indians living in the county when the first settlements were made, though occasionally roving bands would pass through on hunting expeditions, and these trips were occasions for alarm among the settlers, who were fearful of massacres and depredations.

Randolph County was organized January 22, 1829, and named in honor of John Randolph, of Roanoke.

The first clerk of the county, as well as of the circuit court, was Robert Wilson, who later became United States Senator.

The first sheriff was Hancock Jackson, afterwards Lieutenant Governor of Missouri.

The county court appointed Thomas J. Gorman the first surveyor, Terry Bradley the first assessor, and Jacob Medley the first collector.

Among the first constables was Nathan Hunt, after whom and his brother Daniel, Huntsville was named. For forty years Nathan Hunt was constable for Salt Spring Township.

The first circuit court for Randolph County was held at the house of William Goggin, just outside the present limits of Huntsville, the place designated by the General Assembly as the temporary seat of justice. Honorable David Todd was the presiding judge, and Robert Wilson, clerk. The members of the first grand

Among the earliest lawyers to practice in the courts of Randolph County were John F. Ryland, John B. Clark, Jo Davis, Thomas Reynolds, who was later Governor of Missouri, and Samuel Moore.

In 1830 the county court appointed Robert Wilson as county seat commissioner to act for the county in the matter of perfecting the title to property donated to the county for county seat

The commissioners appointed by the General Assembly on the permanent location of the county seat reported December 4, 1830, that they had accepted tracts of land from William Goggins and his wife, Nancy, from Daniel Hunt and wife, and Henry Winburn and wife. January 5, 1831, Commissioner Wilson reported that the donors had made to the county deeds to the property, and the county court ordered that the land be surveyed and laid out in town lots and sold at auction on six, twelve and eighteen months' time. February 3, 1831, the plan of the town was approved, and a few months later a public sale of lots was held. The new town was called Huntsville, after Daniel Hunt, one of the donors of the town site, and his brother, Nathan Hunt, and was not named after Judge Ezra Hunt, as erroneously claimed by some writers of history. When the town was laid out it was covered with a dense wood, which was gradually cleared away as houses were erected and streets opened up.

Soon after the railroad was built to Moberly an effort was made to have the county seat removed there, and it was voted upon at the general election, but the proposition was defeated. Later, a State law was enacted by the Legislature divided all the courts of the county equally between Moberly and Huntsville, and for many years alternate sessions of the probate, circuit and county courts have been held at the two places.
