Saline County--A county in the northwest central part of the State, seventy miles east of Kansas City. It borders the Missouri River on the north and on the east, Cooper County touches it in the southeast, while Pettis County bounds it on the south and Lafayette County on the west.

The first settlers were the overflow from Howard County, who located immediately upon the river on the eastern boundary. They were mostly Kentuckians and Tennesseans, with a few Virginians and Carolinians. In 1807 or 1808 George Sibley had established a trading post near the present site of Arrow Rock, and to this vicinity came the first of the pioneers Jesse Cox, who was joined the following year by his brothers, Thomas and Joseph, and his son in law, William Gregg. In 1814 Gregg was killed by Indians, and his daughter, Patsy, was carried away, but was rescued by a pursuing party.

Samuel McLahan had attempted to make a home in the vicinity in 1811, but he met the same fate with Gregg, and in the same year.

In 1816 came Daniel Thornton, Isaac Clark and William Clark, from Tennessee, who had made their passage in a keel boat. Later, the same year, came the Nave (now known as Neff) families, who traveled by land. Henry Nave brought with him the first wheeled wagon seen in the county. Fred Hartgrove, John Hartgrove and Dr. John Sappington joined the same settlement in 1819. In 1820 Isaac and Abraham Nave (Neff), with others, came from Tennessee in a keel boat laden with small machine castings and liquors. In 1819 Henry Nave and Thornton planted the first wheat, and in 1820 Nave, Hartgrove and Sappington made a rude craft and floated to St. Louis on a trading trip. In 1815 James Wilhite and William Hayes, from Tennessee, located not far from the present site of Cambridge and Jacob Ish came the following year. A daughter of Ish was the first white child born in the county.

Laban Garrett claimed to have been the first school teacher, in 1817, and there were numerous preachers of various denominations. The Petite Osage Bottom was settled in 1815 or 1816 by Elijah Arthur, a Revolutionary War soldier; John Dustin and Robert and William White.

In 1817 Bartholomew Gwinn located on the site of Frankfort, and was soon followed by George Rhoades and Nathaniel Walker. In 1819 Asa Finley settled on the Salt Fork, and in 1819 Alexander Gilbraith built a mill on the same stream about nine miles southeast of the present Marshall.

A large immigration came in 1827-8. Among the newcomers was John A. Jones, who engaged in salt making near Gilbraith's mill, and the settlement came to be known as Jonesborough.

Prior to 1820, what is now Saline County was a portion of Cooper County. It was created by act of the General Assembly November 25, 1820, and was named for the many salt springs it contained. Its original territory comprised portions of the present counties of Pettis and Benton. Its survey was made by Duff Green and Benjamin Chambers. Jefferson, on the Missouri River, a short distance below the present town of Cambridge, was designated as the county seat. Bartholomew Gwinn, a Virginian, and George Tennille, of French descent, were appointed county justices. The court first met April 16, 1821 when Benjamin Chambers, a Pennsylvanian, was appointed clerk. He held the position for sixteen years. In August, 1822, James Wilkinson was elected sheriff. His commission bore the signature of Governor McNair, who appended his private seal, in absence of a State seal. February 5, 1821, was held the first term of circuit court, Judge David Todd presiding. The court officers were Hamilton E. Gamble, district attorney; Benjamin Chambers, clerk, and John Goodin, sheriff. Attorneys present were Cyrus Edwards, George Tompkins, John F. Ryland, Dabney Carr, Abiel Leonard and Duff Green.

In 1840 the county seat was removed to Marshall on completion of the courthouse. Martin Palmer was the first Representative in the Legislature from Saline County.

Volume I, Page 63 Arrow Rock

A village on the Missouri River, in Saline County, eighteen miles east of Marshall, the county seat. It has a public school. In 1899 the population was 600. It is the oldest town in Saline county. In 1807 or 1808 George Sibley built a log house for the sale of goods to the Indians, and in 1811 Henry Locknell established the first ferry across the Missouri River west of Old Franklin. Dr. Sappington was the first physician.

The first church in the county was organized here in 1820 by Peyton Nowlin, a Baptist. The same year Jacob Ish performed the first marriage ceremony, the couple being John Tarwater and Ruth Odle, probably Odell. The first school teacher was Ned Mulholland, an Irishman. In 1839 the county seat was removed to this place from Jonesborough, and was subsequently removed to Marshall. The town became an important shipping point.

The name of the town was formerly New Philadelphia. The origin of the later name is in dispute. Some assert that it was called Arrow Rock on account of the Indians making their arrow heads from stone found there. Others contend that the name is corrupted from Airy Rock, so called from the high winds prevalent upon the eminence.
