In February of 1976, a visit to the old cemetery shows that it is now and always fenced for protection and under the watchful eye of the caretaker, no longer vandalized. The Intrepid Factor, Executive Director of the Golden West have placed a California Historical Landmark plaque near the entrance gate.

In the 15 years since the D.A.C. recorded the names in this cemetery and our visit in February 1976, age and weather have taken their toll in deteriorating further the names and dates on crosses and monuments, making the following report even more valuable to historians and genealogists.

The old village of San Mateo was swept away in the 1851 Santa Ana River flood.

AGUA MANSA CEMETERY

The Agua Mansa Cemetery is located just north of the Riverside County line and is connected prominently with Riverside history. The graveyard, thought to be the resting place of such early pioneers as Louis Robidoux and Lorenzo Trujillo, is all that remains of a settlement established on the west bank of the Santa Ana River in the 1840's. Known as Agua Mansa, the community was settled by over 100 pioneer families who had come from New Mexico to the San Bernardino Valley. There is evidence that Agua Mansa is the oldest non-Indian cemetery in either Riverside or San Bernardino counties, barring private plots adjoining the old land grant ranches.

On May 2, 1951, members of the Sir William Lovelace Chapter Daughters of American Colonists recorded the names on graves in this old Southern California pioneer cemetery. Though most of the names are Spanish, there are some American names. The recorders noted that there were many unmarked graves, many with names that no longer could be read, and quite a number that had been vandalized. Many graves were marked with crude crosses, some had names put in with brass tacks or nails or poor cement. Others were quite ornate with elaborate statues and stones. Mrs. Anna R. Bordwell donated the records to the Genealogical Society.

Time was not kind to this old cemetery .. neglect and vandalism prompted historians and other interested persons into seeking a means to protect Agua Mansa from further desecration. After several starts and stops, the San Bernardino County Museum took over supervision of the cemetery, installed a caretaker on the property and the 'clean-up' began around 1968.

In February of 1976, a visit to the old cemetery shows that it is neat and clean, fenced for protection and under the watchful eye of the caretaker, no longer vandalized. The Jurupa Parlor, Native Daughters of the Golden West have placed a California Historical Landmark plaque near the entrance gate.

In the 25 years since the D.A.C. recorded the names in this cemetery and our visit in February 1976, age and weather have taken their toll in obliterating further the names and dates on crosses and home-made tombstones, making the following record even more valuable to historians and genealogists.

The old village of Agua Mansa was swept away in the 1862 Santa Ana River flood.
