Dilemma of a Researcher.....WHY IS IT???

1. The only overturned, face-down gravestone in the cemetery is your grandfather's.
2. The blot on the page of the census covers your grandmother's birthdate.
3. Your ancestor's will leaves his estate to his beloved wife and children, but doesn't name them.
4. The person next to you has all the luck and you can't find a thing.
5. The information you desperately need could be found only on the 1890 Census.
6. The copy machines have long lines when you are in a hurry.
7. Just as you are hot on the trail of an ancestor, it's always time for the library to close.
8. You can find so much on one family line, but so little on another.

MENDING OLD DOCUMENTS

Old documents which are printed on one side and have been torn or broken along old folds can be repaired using RICE PAPER and ACID-FREE PASTE;

Paste can be made at home with

1	tablespoon	cornstarch
1	teaspoon	flour
$\frac{1}{4}$	teaspoon	Borax (or Milk of Magnesia)
1	cup	water

Combine all ingredients, cook about 3 minutes, stirring constantly. This makes about one-half cup of paste...it is acid-free paste and will not harm your documents. Make all the repairs on the unprinted side of the document.

Your editor has checked Norfolk stores for RICE PAPER and found there is no outlet for this type of paper. In Omaha it can be purchased at Standard Blue, 10011 J Street, Eastern Nebraska Genealogical Soc., Jan. 1985 - Vol XIII, No. 10

35 million immigrants to be listed in big computer project

PHILADELPHIA, PA. — Temple University, in cooperation with the Balch Institute for Ethnic Studies, is creating a new center for immigration research. Purpose of the center, known as the Temple University-Balch Institute Center for Immigration Research, is to conduct demographic and genealogical research on the origins of the American people.

The center's first project is the massive task of computerizing information about the 35 million "huddled masses" of immigrants who came by ship to America's eastern shores between 1820 and 1924.

THIS PROJECT, expected to provide priceless demographic, genealogical and socio-economic data on the ancestors of about 100 million Americans living today, represents the "missing link" between European village records and U.S. Census information.

The agreement creating the center was signed by Peter Liacouras, president of Temple University, whose parents came to the United States from Greece, and a Slovak emigre, M. Mark Stolarik, president of the Balch Institute.

When the initial project is completed, the center will have a detailed computer index, culled laboriously from ships' manifests, of every newcomer who arrived at U.S. ports between Boston and New Orleans during a period of more than a century.

The information which the center is indexing includes the names of the ships, the passengers, their towns or villages of origin, their destinations, those who accompanied them, the dates of arrival, their occupation and related data. The manifests are like a census. The White House has called the collection the "Fort Knox of American history," according to Dr. Ira Glazier, Temple professor of economic history and center director.

"IN EFFECT, we're compiling a giant directory of American families," says Dr. Glazier, who is studying emigration from southern and eastern Europe and editing a multi-volume work, "The Famine Immigrants: Lists of Irish Immigrants Arriving at the Port of New York, 1846-1851."

Professor Glazier is basing this work, and the much larger computer index, on original ships' manifests which he found in a Maryland warehouse. The manifests had been microfilmed by the federal government in the 1940s and 1950s.

"It's important to have the originals," Dr. Stolarik says, "because clerks often made mistakes in transcribing names, and you have to look at the original entries for more accurate spellings."

The manifests, he says, represent "one of the largest collections of manuscript data on European immigration in the western hemisphere." Dr. Glazier's own family should be somewhere in the manifests because his grandparents came to America from Moscow and Odessa, Russia.

The 11 tons of records are at the Balch Institute in Philadelphia, where work proceeds on the computer index. It is a difficult job, because many of the lists have been folded shut for more than a century.

"TRYING TO OPEN one of these manifest lists is like trying to open a potato chip," says Stephanie Morris, the archivist who is assisting Dr. Glazier.

One technique she uses is putting the records in the refrigerator overnight. The moisture enables the papers to be stretched flat, with a blotter between each sheet, turning the manifest into a "soggy potato chip," that can be peeled open.

Another step in the process is recruiting Temple students who know the languages of the immigrants. Students of Ukrainian descent, for example, review the names of Ukrainian immigrants.

"The Ukrainian newcomers might have traveled on a French ship," Ms. Morris explains, "and the clerk might not have written some of the names correctly." To help get the proper names, she has become an expert in deciphering 19th century handwriting script.

"There's a great deal of expertise involved in this work," Dr. Glazier says. "By linking data bases in the sender and receiver countries we can learn a great deal about immigration and multi-generational mobility in the immigrant population."

Temple and Balch representatives are currently seeking funds to complete the computer index. One requirement is a larger computer to handle the wealth of information. Another is funding for data-entry clerks.

Dr. Stolarik and Dr. Glazier are also looking at a major project in conjunction with the renovation of Ellis Island in New York City in 1992. With the help of the center, visitors to the Ellis Island Museum could seat themselves in front of an array of computer terminals, type in their family name and receive a print-out of information about their roots.

"The Bicycle Ran Away, The Thing Had A Mind Of It's Own"

C.D. Jenkins Suffers From The Effects Of The Bke Craze. It went where it wanted to and Charles saw stars--C.D. Jenkins, steward at the hospital, was touched with the bke craze a few days ago and he concluded to learn how to ride a wheel right away. He was helped aboard a machine, the intricacies of steering were carefully explained to him, the prow of the thing was turned down hill, and when everything was ready, like the aeronaut, he shouted "let 'er go!" The thing went along peaceably enough at the start, as docile as a young kitten, and Charles decided in his own mind that he was considerable of a rider. Soon, however, the contrivance began to gain speed as the hill became steeper, and very shortly Charles found himself whirling through the air at a lightning rate. He lost control of the pedals but retained a firm hold of the steering gear which he managed to keep pointed straight shead. He was getting along all right, at least he kept moving, when to his horror he saw a short distance ahead of him directly in his path a hay wagon. He couldn't turn out although he shouted to the blamed thing to "gee" or "haw" or do something, but it didn't do a thing but kept it's nose pointed directly at the hay wagon. Then there was a crash, a sudden stopping of the world, as it were, and Charles went around looking at the stars for a few minutes. When he returned to the affairs of life he found that his nose was more or less used up from coming in contact with the hay wagon, and when he took an inventory of himself he had a limb or joint that did not have all symptoms of having been struck by a pile driver, he was imable to discover it. He does not ride a bike any more.
